JOHN HADNAGY

HUNGARIAN FREEDOM FIGHTER

There is a young man working in Los Angeles who has no illusions about Communism. He is John Hadnagy featured on the left and on succeeding pages. John was a Freedom Fighter in Budapest during the desperate attempt of his fellow Hungarians in 1956 to free themselves from Communist shackles.

John, who was a railroad worker, had been amateur Wrestling Champion of Hungary in the 175 pound class for the years 1954-5-6. When fighting first broke out, he was in a military prison, having been arrested for a minor political offense, so he was unable to take part in the beginning of the struggle. After a few days of fighting, the Russian forces were withdrawn from the city, only to return with tanks on November 2. Just prior to their return, John had been released from prison by the Freedom Fighters and placed in charge of thirty-five men. But the single cannon and small arms of the Freedom Fighters were no match for the Russian tanks and as their ammunition ran low, their plight became desperate. All this time, the Hungarians watched the skies, hoping to sight American planes, which their radios had told them would come to their relief.

After being wounded twice, John took refuge in his apartment for five days, where in the absence of a doctor, it was necessary for him to remove a bullet from his ankle with his pocket knife. He still carries a second bullet in his thigh.

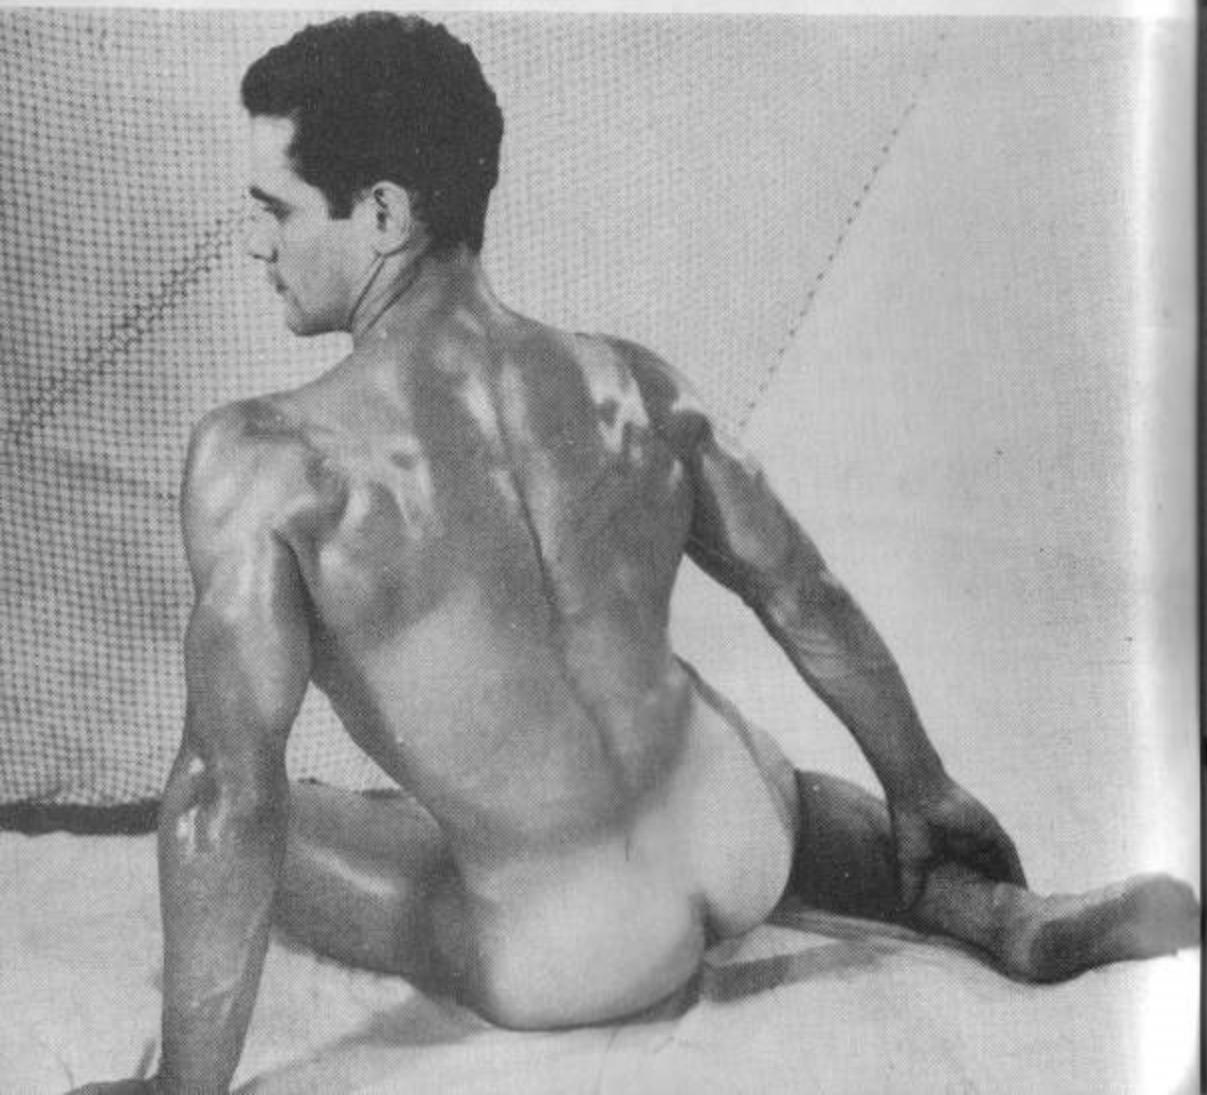
He was arrested on November 9, robbed of his watch and cigarette lighter by the Russians, and after being stripped of his clothing, was tossed into a refrigerated basement where he was left for two days with no food other than a hunk of black bread. Just prior to his arrest, he and 200 other Hungarian fighters had changed their clothes for firemen's uniforms, which led to their ultimate release when the Russians decided that they were German soldiers.

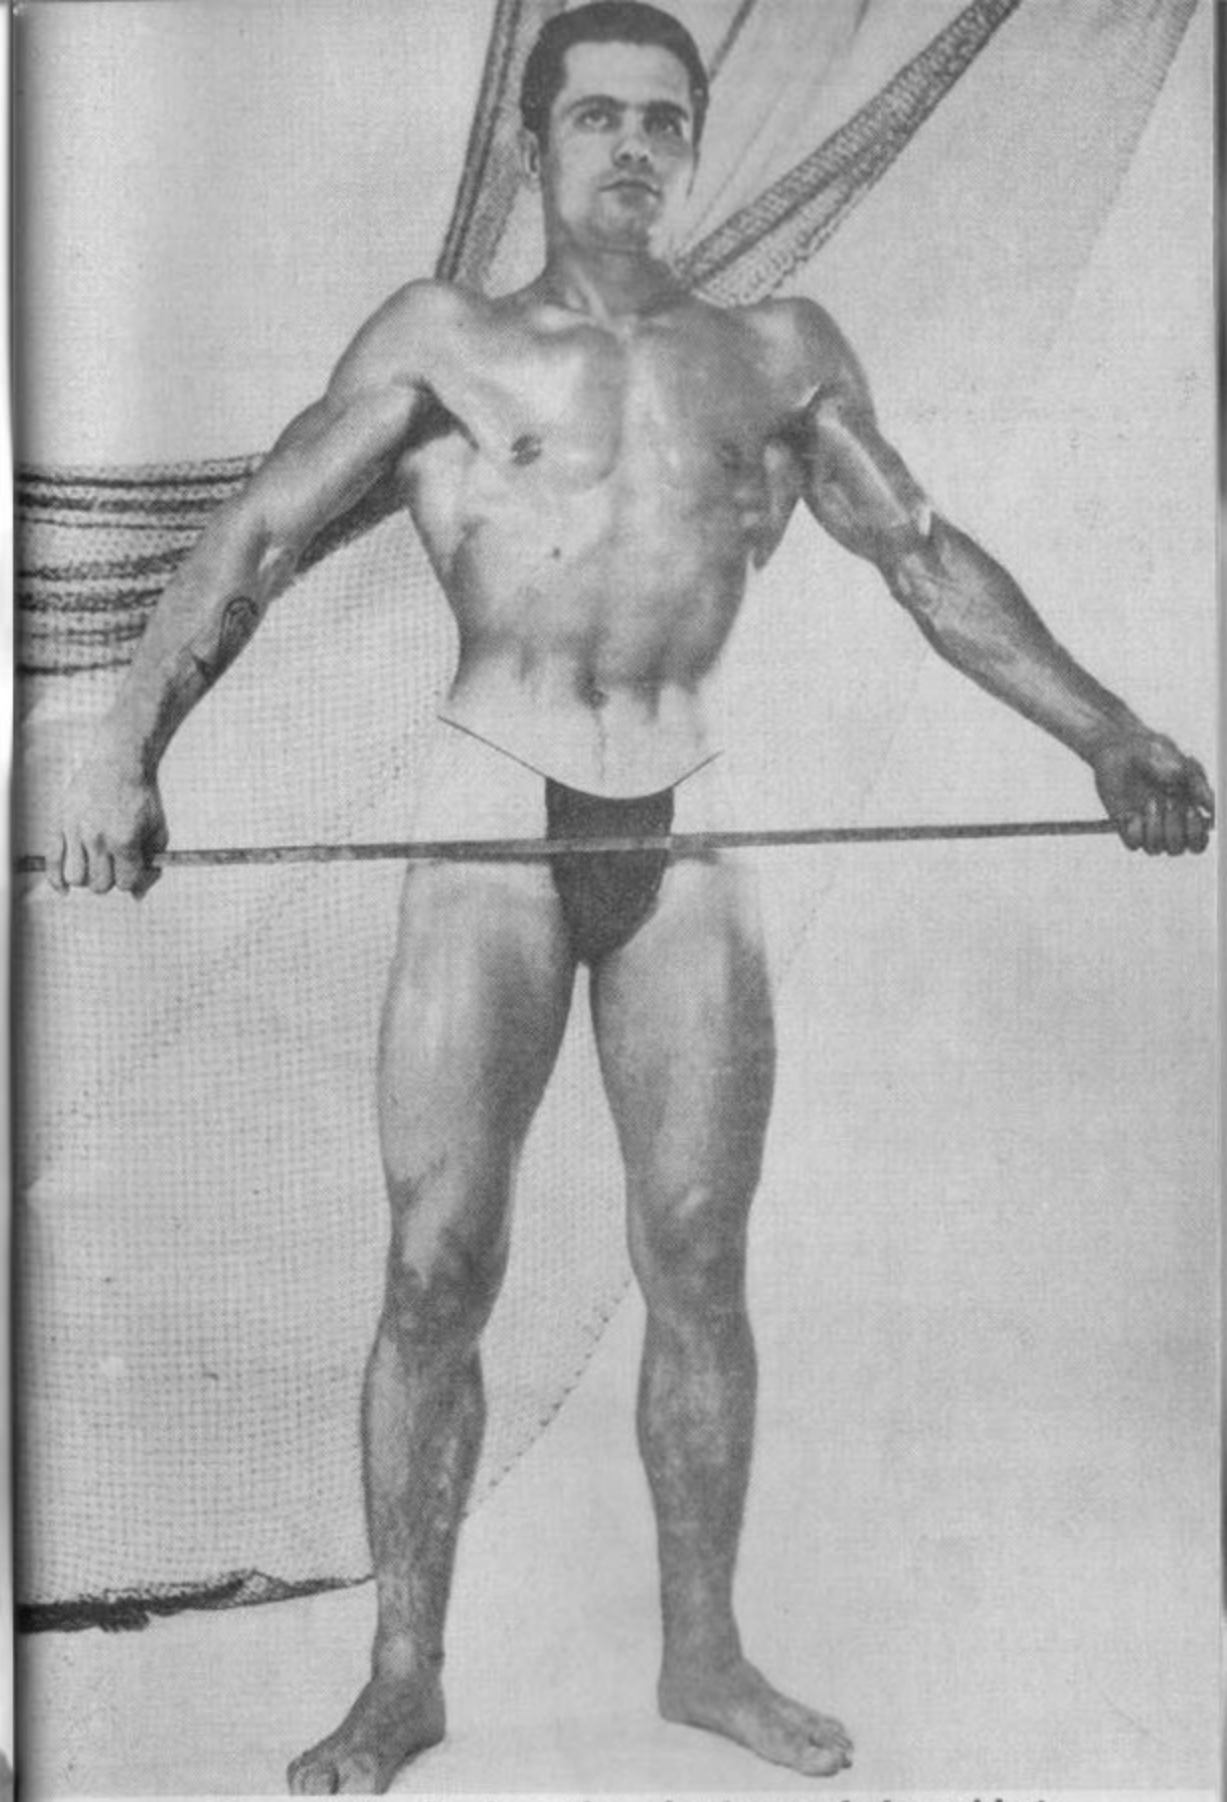
In spite of an infected ankle, John was able to make his way 180 miles to the Austrian border during the next two weeks. As he was still carrying a gun when he crossed the border, he was arrested by the Austrians and kept in jail for a week. A few months later he went to Munich, Germany, where he remained until April 1957, then with other Hungarian refugees, he was flown to Camp Kilmer in New Jersey.

John's best friend was killed during the fighting and that friend's brother, a boy of fourteen years was arrested and is still being held in prison.

Two memories still cause John's blood pressure to rise: One was the sight of a hundred women and small children standing in a bread line, on whom the Russians opened fire with machine guns, killing every one of them; The other was the spectacle of a small child, who had picked up an empty rifle shell with which to play, having the Russians place her against a wall and brutally shoot her.

John thinks it is a fine thing to be living in a country where one does not have to lie awake in the night, listening for a knock on the door to tell you that the secret police have come to put you in prison. He is sure of another thing. If this country ever becomes involved in a struggle with Russia, he wants to be among the first to volunteer to fight against Communism.





Here John displays the physique of the athletic champion which he most certainly is.

John's life story has been purchased by a major studio and certainly we may expect it to be both a thrill and an inspiration when it is filmed and released to the public.
